A boat can sail even in a storm thanks to the keel, that is what is not usually seen but is there in the water. So in the storm of this time we can “sail” thanks to the keel: the faith – which is experienced only by someone of us – and the spirituality – which is a human intrinsic part – allow us to face the stormy sea.

With this part that is secret, but real, we try with all our strength not to sink, to reach – who knows? – a port or we depart towards a new route.

The ships are made to face the storms so we can try to face the waves. We face them with courage (which is not the absence of fear: who is fearless is a fool).
No crew seeks the storm, but, if the storm arrives, they face it: together

~ Mario Cagna, MDiv